COMING ART EXHIBITION

The week of August 22 will bring to The Cape Cinema, to be shown in the lobby wholly free of charge, an exhibition paintings assembled by the artist under the title of "Seamen and Ships." All of these have been made by the distinguished painter, Coulton Waugh. He is noted for his mural ship paintings and for a great many years has been a keen student of the sea, being a practical sailor as well as an accomplished artist. He often sails his own trawler and with it goes to the far reaches of the North Atlantic. He comes of three generations of celebrated artists and has a particular flair for depicting Cape Cod with all its romance and old traditions.

THE STUDENT GROUP

In connection with the activities of the Cape Playhouse, Mr. Moore has provided fo rthe functioning of what is termed a "student group." To those keenly interested in both acting and the mechanics of the theatre, an understanding of the stage, in all of its angles, as well as the opportunity of a close study of modern dramatic methods can be obtained. The group will be under the personal supervision of Mr. George Somnes, one of the most experienced stage and motion picture directors of the day. For the student who is proficient in work there is always the opportunity of appearing in small parts with the regular acting company, when such parts may be available.

Detailed information can be obtained from Mr. Walter P. Murphy, business manager of The Cape Playhouse.

THE GARDEN

As part of your afternoon's entertainment, visit the picturesque garden adjacent to the Cinema theatre, either before of after the matinee performance. A wide varity of wild and cultivated flowers of brilliant summer colorings are artistically and effectively laid out against a background of green trees. Placed about the paths are quaintly fashioned old settles.

WHO'S WHO IN THE CAST

JANET BEECHER, has appeared at The Cape Playhouse in "Cradle Snatchers" and with Basil Rathbone in other plays, has an enviable record of success on the stage. Her magnificent performance in David Belasco's "Call the Doctor" was followed by Broadway triumphs in "The Woman in Room 13," "The Great Adventure," "Fair and Warmer" and "Courage," the latter play occupying a full year of her playing career. "The Kiss in the Taxi", "Bill of Divorcement", co-starring with the late Bruce McRae and "The Love Child." Recently Miss Beecher has been appearing on the stage in London.

ROSE HOBART, although American born has played almost a succession of English parts ever since her stage appearances gained an exceptional importance at the time she succeeded Molly Kerr in "The Vortex" with Noel Coward at the Henry Miller Theatre in New York. She was a member of Eve LeGalliene's Civic Repertory Company during the initial season of that organization. She played with Helen Hayes in "What Every Woman Knows." Scored a strong personal hit a year ago when she and Philip Merrivale did "Death Take a Holiday." Recently Miss Hobart has been making screen appearances in Hollywood.

WALTER ABEL was for sometime identified as "the O'Neill actor" because he was constantly appearing in plays written by Eugene O'Neill. Although he had been on the stage for three years at the time that Kenneth MacGowan, Robert Edmund Jones and Eugene O'Neill opened the Provincetown theatre. The O'Neill plays in which he appeared include "Beyond the Horizon," "Desire Under the Elms" and "Glencairn." Mr. Abel was with the Theatre Guild when that organization did "Ambush" and "Back to Methuselah" and he returned to that management for "Mourning Becomes Electra." He did "Coquette" in London.

WILFRED SEAGRAM was born in England and although parental dictates were that he become a civil engineer his bent was toward the stage and it was his inclination that he followed in making a choice of occupation after leaving college. He acted with Terry and Neilson in England and came to America with them. Here he has a splendid record as an actor. Roles in plays for Henry W. Savage, Charles Dillingham and Klaw and Erlanger; appearances for Charles Frohman, the Shuberts and George Tyler; leading parts with Ann Murdock, Nazimova, two years in "Loyalties;" a season with "Journey's End" in New York and roles done for the Theatre Guild are among his stage successes.

The Animal Kingdom

FRANCES FULLER

WILLIAM HARRIGAN

Miss Fuller, Miss Baxter and Mr. Harrigan are of the original New York cast.

THE ANIMAL KINGDOM

"The Animal Kingdom" is the latest play by one of America's most brilliant dramatists, Philip Barry. Writing with all the wit, the magic, and the rich evocative spell of "Tomorrow and Tomorrow," "Holiday" and "Paris Bound," Barry presents the story of a man and two marriages, one with benefit of clergy.

It is the romance of an unusual man's attempt to adjust himself to the modern world, told with Barry's sure command of the mood and pace of the American scene. Tom Collier belongs to that small but important group of men whose pattern is never the pattern of the age; he is an unconscious artists, a non-conformist at heart, who could not be what is known as a "good citizen" no matter how hard he tried. Confused by our common animal heritage, he looked upon the two women in his life and found it difficult to discover which was the wife and which the mistress.

The author employs in "The Animal Kingdom" the sparkling, finely tempered dialogue and the engaging comedy that are so inevitably linked with his name. Here in this fascinating and provocative play, Mr. Barry writes at the height of his brilliance and power.
